BALDWINVILLE, ONONDAGA CO., N. Y., THURSDAY, AUGUST 31, 1899.

—Shortly after seven o'clock Wednesday morning a young son of Cornelius McCarthy, of Smoky Hollow, was driving down Oswego street on his way to the milk station, when his horse started to run. The animal ran faster and faster as the center of the village was reached, the boy clinging bravely to the lines and trying his best to stop the now thoroughly frightened beast. When turning into Canal street the horse slipped and fell, the wagon tipped over and the boy and milk can were thrown some distance. The top was on the can when it was picked up and no milk was spilled, the boy was only slightly bruised, though somewhat scared, as was but natural, and slight damages to the harness and wagon were the only things left to mark what might have been a serious accident. Wm. Jones carried the milk to its destination and the boy drove back home.
